

Brie Cohen - Biography

As a performing artist, teacher and choreographer Brie has worked in many facets of the dance industry. Working in Los Angeles and Melbourne, her credits include Aurora, Justin Timberlake and Ne-yo. While living in Los Angeles Brie was a part of Drakes tour visuals and choreographer for Alaina Catillo's 'I don't think I love you anymore' music video. Brie has performed and choreographed at Golden Plains, Splendour In The Grass and Laneway music festivals, alongside teaching at leading dance studios locally and overseas including EXPG-LA.

In Brie's latest project movexfree, she will be guiding dancers in their training through an experience of self-awareness and mindfulness, simultaneously focusing on authentic execution, dance techniques, creativity and musicality. 'The dancers will learn how to feel connected to themselves and their self-expression so that they can develop their craft from the inside out'.
